More Cincinnati Business Coming to Leuisville.

It is no spirit of consting that we most the implicatable indications of a great future for the city of Leuisville. We have the geographical position on Ginetianait, no mistake and by and by we will have all the capital and enterprise necessary to the building up of the great metropolis of the Southwest, which Louisville is surely destined to be. No one sees this any botter than our wide-awake neighbors over the river from Covington, and we are not extravagant when we anticipate that many of Cincinnatifs best business men will eventually establish themselves at this point. It is reported now that George W. Phillips, each of the largest provision brokers in that city, will shortly remove his business to Leuisville, such his example will certainly be followed by others. It is further stated that Monne. Kent & Oc. and McCord & Bradley, two prominent business frams of New Albany, will establish themselves in this city on the lat of January, Louisville is by all odds the best business point, and she can well short now to sarke out boldty. Everybody sees her importance and are bound to recognize it.
